Intro

A collection of some of my favorite sun, plant, bird and animal photos.

Ok, quick quiz with no references where was this picture shot at?

The castle moat at Disneyland!

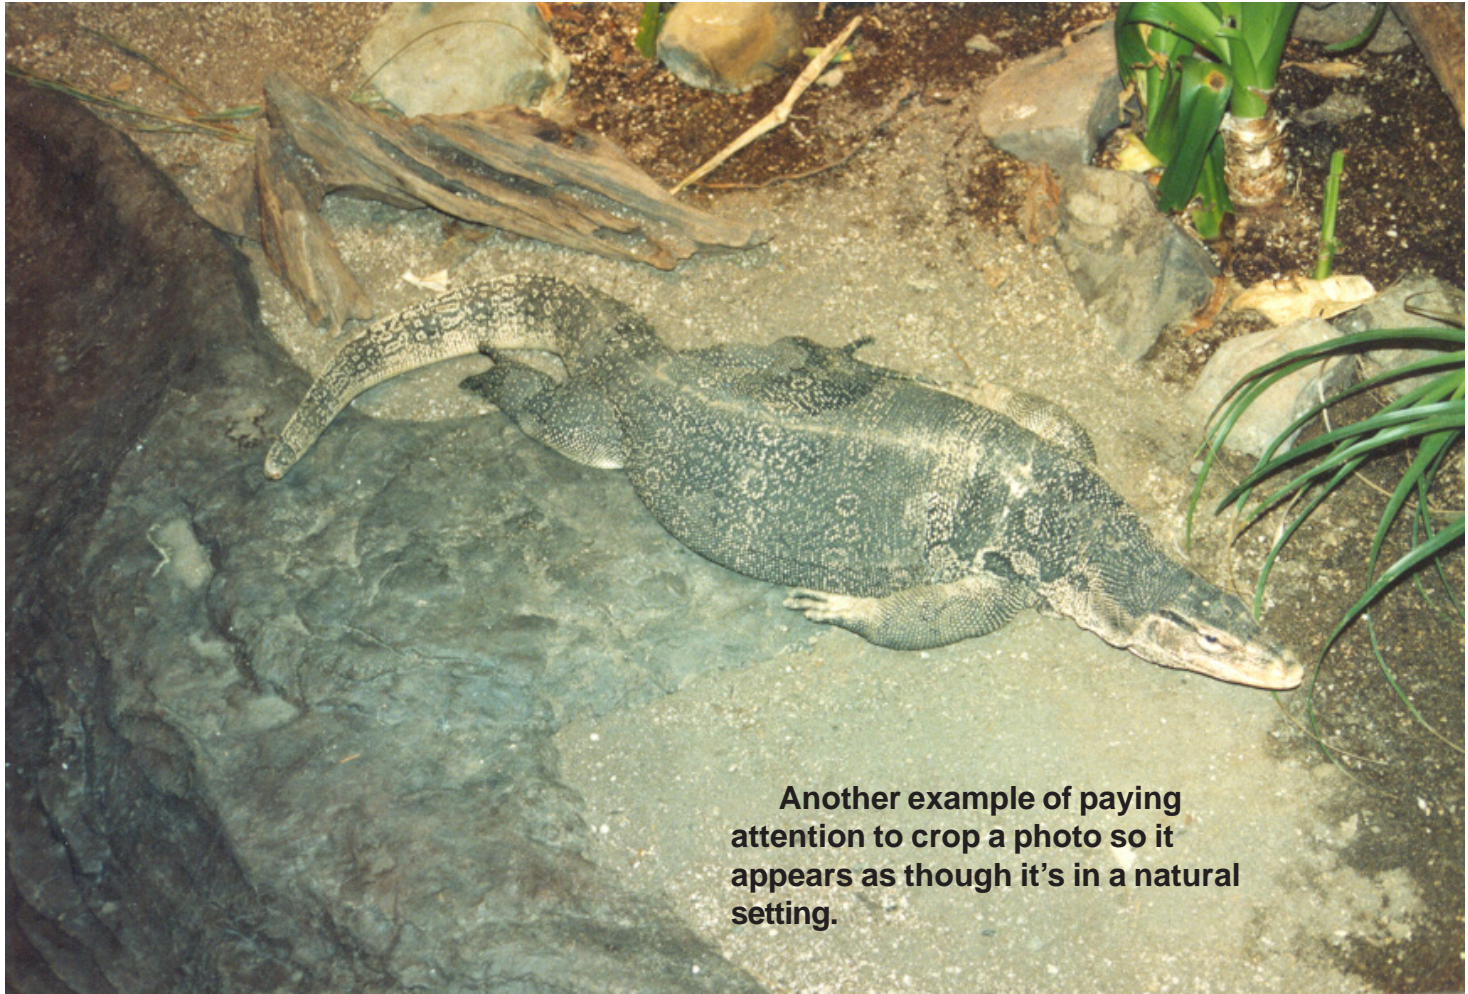

Very nice composition, and could never get animals to pose for shots. Great animal shots are half luck as much as talent. They all take time and patience. Many photographers will shoot rolls to get the one shot that's worth keeping.

I had a problem getting photos to come out right in Yosemite, cameras would focus on the cliffs and wash out the skies. I ended up going through six rolls of film to get the one right setting for glistening cliffs and blue skies.

Another example of paying attention to crop a photo so it appears as though it's in a natural setting.

Depth of field can almost delete unwanted features (chain link fencing).

Interesting subjects can be both large and small.

This one is also shot through a chain link cage, depth of field worked perfectly.

Always be ready for shooting.

My favorite ducks.

Prologue

Thought I had more animals than birds, but turned out the other way around for this collection.
