Intro

Nancy, my first wife, and I drove out to the Grand Canyon from Southern California to see the Grand Canyon.

I've never been nor will be a 'desert' person, and once you've seen it there's not a whole lot to do or see unless you were to go down inside it. Which I imagine would be quite an adventure.

What surprised us the most was that the next day we woke up to inches of snow on the ground.

The snow at the 'higher' elevations made it much more interesting.

These pines show the wind swept conditions of the ridges.

They actually did tear down this 'London Bridge' and move it to the river. As if the Canyon weren't enough of a draw.

Indian culture is still pretty strong around the canyon.

Prologue

I'm sorry, but to me, unless you were down in the canyon, on the river bed, to me the Grand Canyon is just a big hole in the ground in the middle of desert.

It was an interesting trip, and everyone should see it at least once in their lifetimes, I just found that once was enough for my mountain tastes.
